

The International Economics Minor

The international economics minor, offered by the Department of Economics, is designed to prepare students to understand and participate in the global economy; the program aims to deepen the student's knowledge of economics within a culturally and linguistically diverse world. The major is useful to students contemplating careers at home or overseas in businesses, particularly those that have international operations, as well as NGOs and government.

The minor can be easily completed within three academic semesters. The requirements can be found here. Please address any questions you have to the minor director Professor Farida Khan at fkhan@uccs.edu
